

DIDN'T EVEN FEAZE THE LAD

Thursday afternoon about two o'clock a small boy of about twelve years, named Paine, was on his way to school on Beretania street. The youngster was on the front end of the car, but just then the ancient structure of the track and a wheel passed over the boy's feet.

The boy was thrown to the ground, and waves of sympathy went out from the passengers to the prostrate one. "What the poor thing," said the women, "they waited in their chewing for a post."

"He can get heavy damages," remarked the crowd of men-folk.

But, to the surprise of all, the boy arose. Questioned as to the extent of his injuries, he shook his assaulted head and exclaimed:

"I pehawi I'm not hurt. Those old mule cars couldn't hurt a fellow anyway."

The giving vent to which sentimentality boarded the car and proceeded in the direction of his home.

The passengers on the car marveled greatly, saying within themselves: "We would have thought that any good boy would come out of a Honolulu mule car."
